How To Use Water To END YOUR CONSTIPATION WORRIES

Here's how to get to the basic root of your constipation problem. Bring enough moisture to your lower colon every day. As soon as food wastes are normally moistened, they will "move" as they should and you will enjoy daily elimination.

So do this to end your constipation worries. Take SERUTAN every day with plenty of water. SERUTAN is a pure vegetable gel which carries twenty times its weight in water to your lower digestive tract where it is needed to promote more normal regularity.

SERUTAN provides the proper moisture, bulk and peristaltic action to help keep you regular. This is utterly different from forcing your system with chemical laxatives which cause diarrhea and may dry you out.

Gentle and Effective

You can take this gentle laxative aid every day because it is a pure, natural, concentrated vegetable gel, and contains no harsh roughage, no oils, salts or chemical laxatives which may be irritating to your system. Get SERUTAN at your drugstore today. Use it faithfully as directed for at least one week. You must be well on the road to daily regularity or your money back from the maker.

Will Rogers 1879-1935

He has been gone 27 years now, but memories of Will Rogers will bring a lump to many a throat today—his birthday anniversary. Bob Taylor made the cover photo and A. Y. Owen the shot above. Both were made at the Rogers shrine, Claremore.

The latest in space-age farm machinery was on display for all to see at the recent State Fair of Oklahoma. But how many of the 633,000 fair-goers really saw the new gadgets from the angles Orbit's cameraman found? Did you? They're on Pages 4 and 5.

There's but one of each in a single day — and that's a pity because Oklahoma sunrises and sunsets tend to be extra-gorgeous. You can hardly blame Oklahomans for facing east as the sun comes up and west when their day nears its end. Not to many men, after all, falls the lucky lot of witnessing more than one sunrise or sunset a day. They're Schirra, Glenn, Carpenter, and soon Oklahoma's Gordon Cooper. Also, of course, assorted Russians. It all adds up to one thing. To get the big break, you have to be in orbit. That's where we invite you to join us — In Orbit, Pages 8 and 9.

Sad news for sorghum lovers — another sorghum mill has shut down for the last time. The romance of molasses time has given way to modern industry. You'll seldom find "sweetenin'" made from the succulent sorghum juices (shown here running from the press into the vat before cooking). So clip the story on Page 26 and paste it in your scrapbook of memories.

Fair Game

"I shall adopt new views as fast as they appear to be true views," said Abraham Lincoln.

Charles Darwin wrote, "False views, if supported by some evidence, do little harm, for everyone takes a salutary pleasure in proving their falseness."

And newsman Ernie Pyle stated, "I write from the worm's-eye point of view."

Here are some new and different views of quite ordinary things, caught by camera more or less at worm's-eye level at the state fair. They're not altogether true views, but neither are they false.

Their purpose is harmless. It's hoped Orbit readers will find some pleasure in identifying them for what they are. Some are easy, but some might stump you. Here's a tip—city folks might not fare as well as farm folks.

But be careful, for as that line goes in "H.M.S. Pinafore":

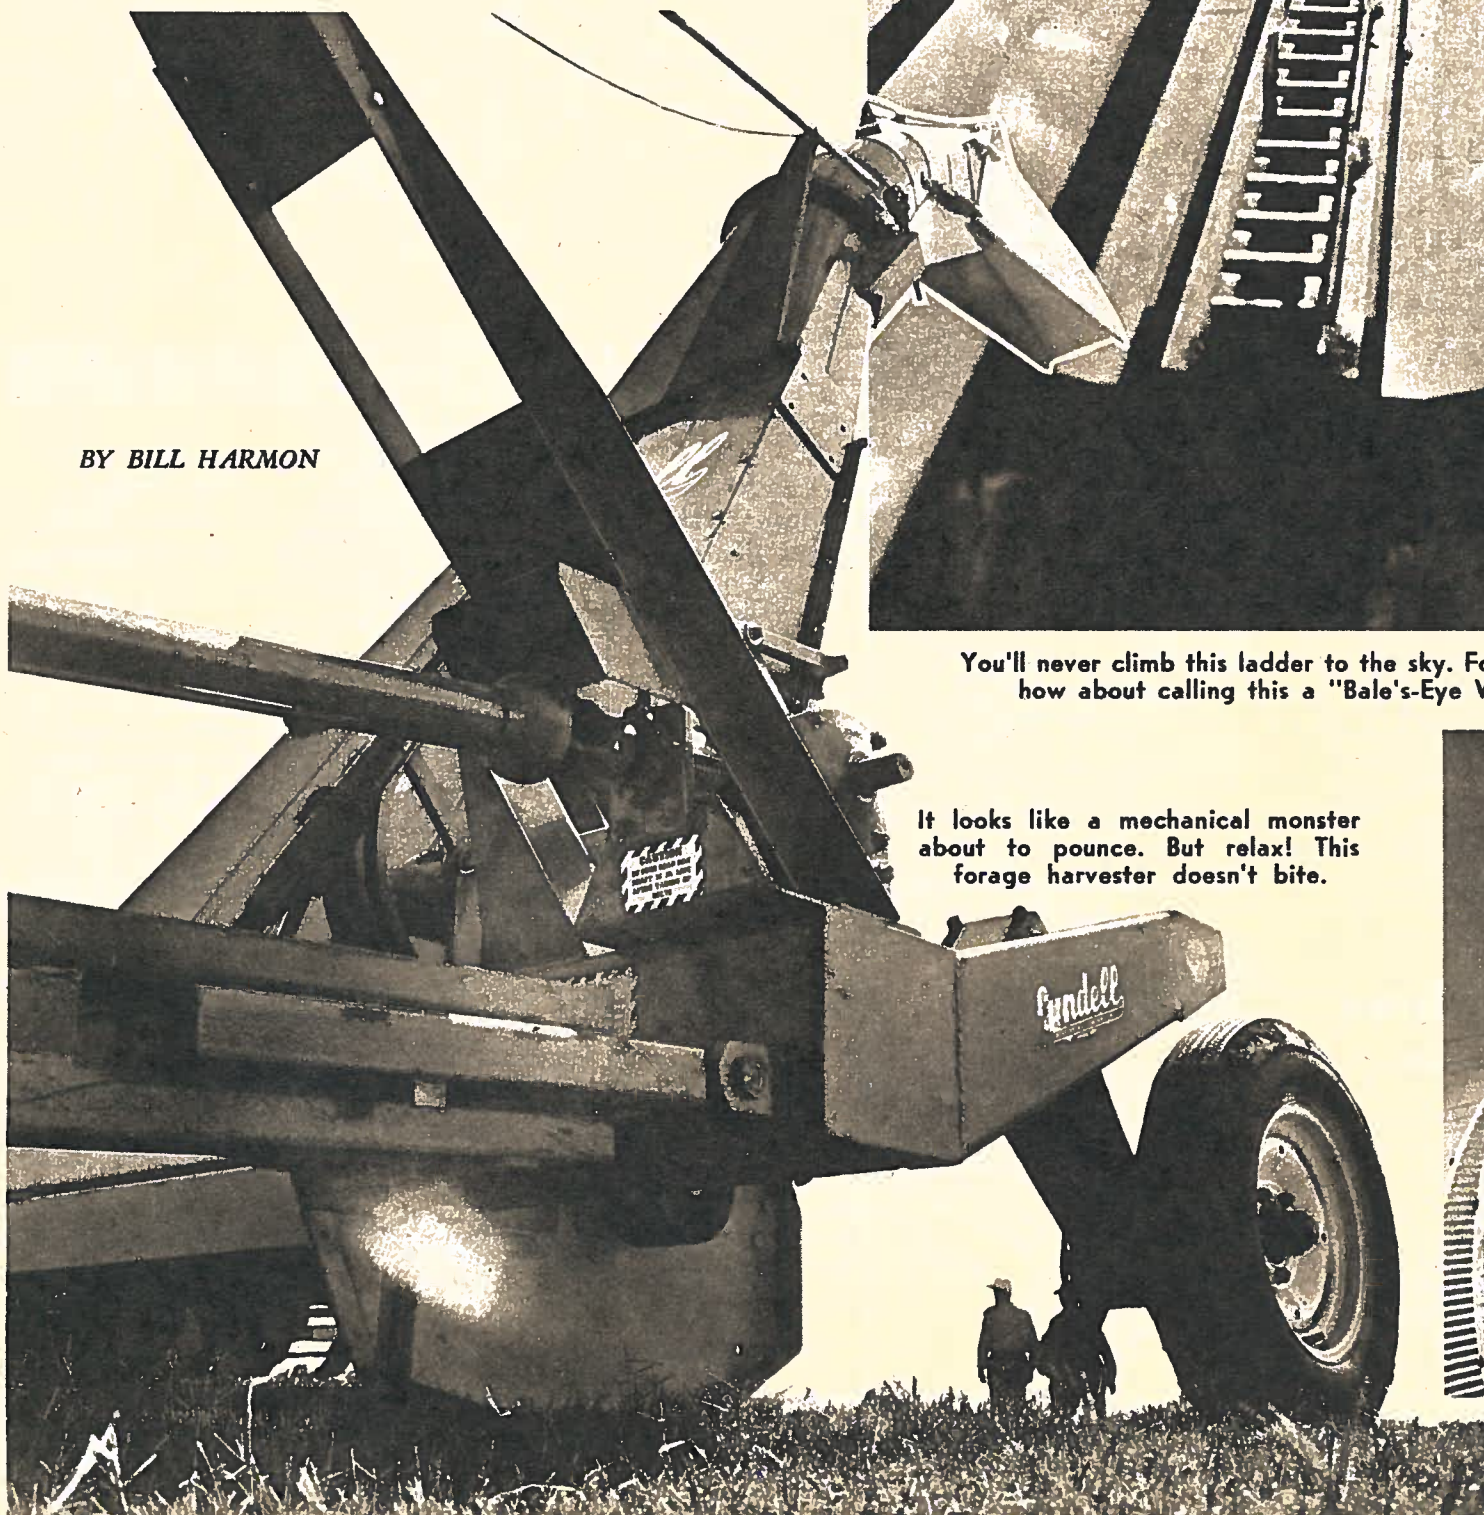

"Things are seldom what they seem,
Skim milk masquerades as cream."

BY BILL HARMON

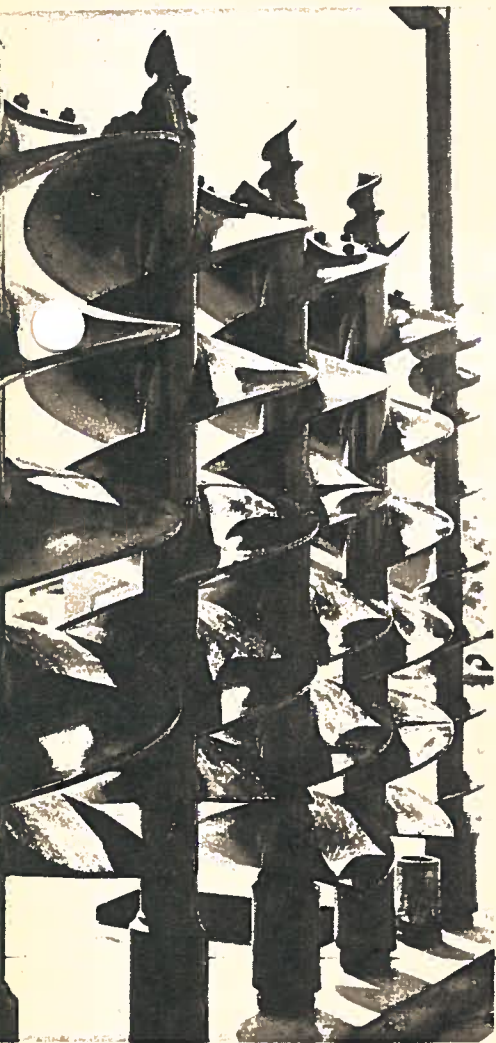

You'll never climb this ladder to the sky. For lack of something better, how about calling this a "Bale's-Eye View of a Hay Baler"?

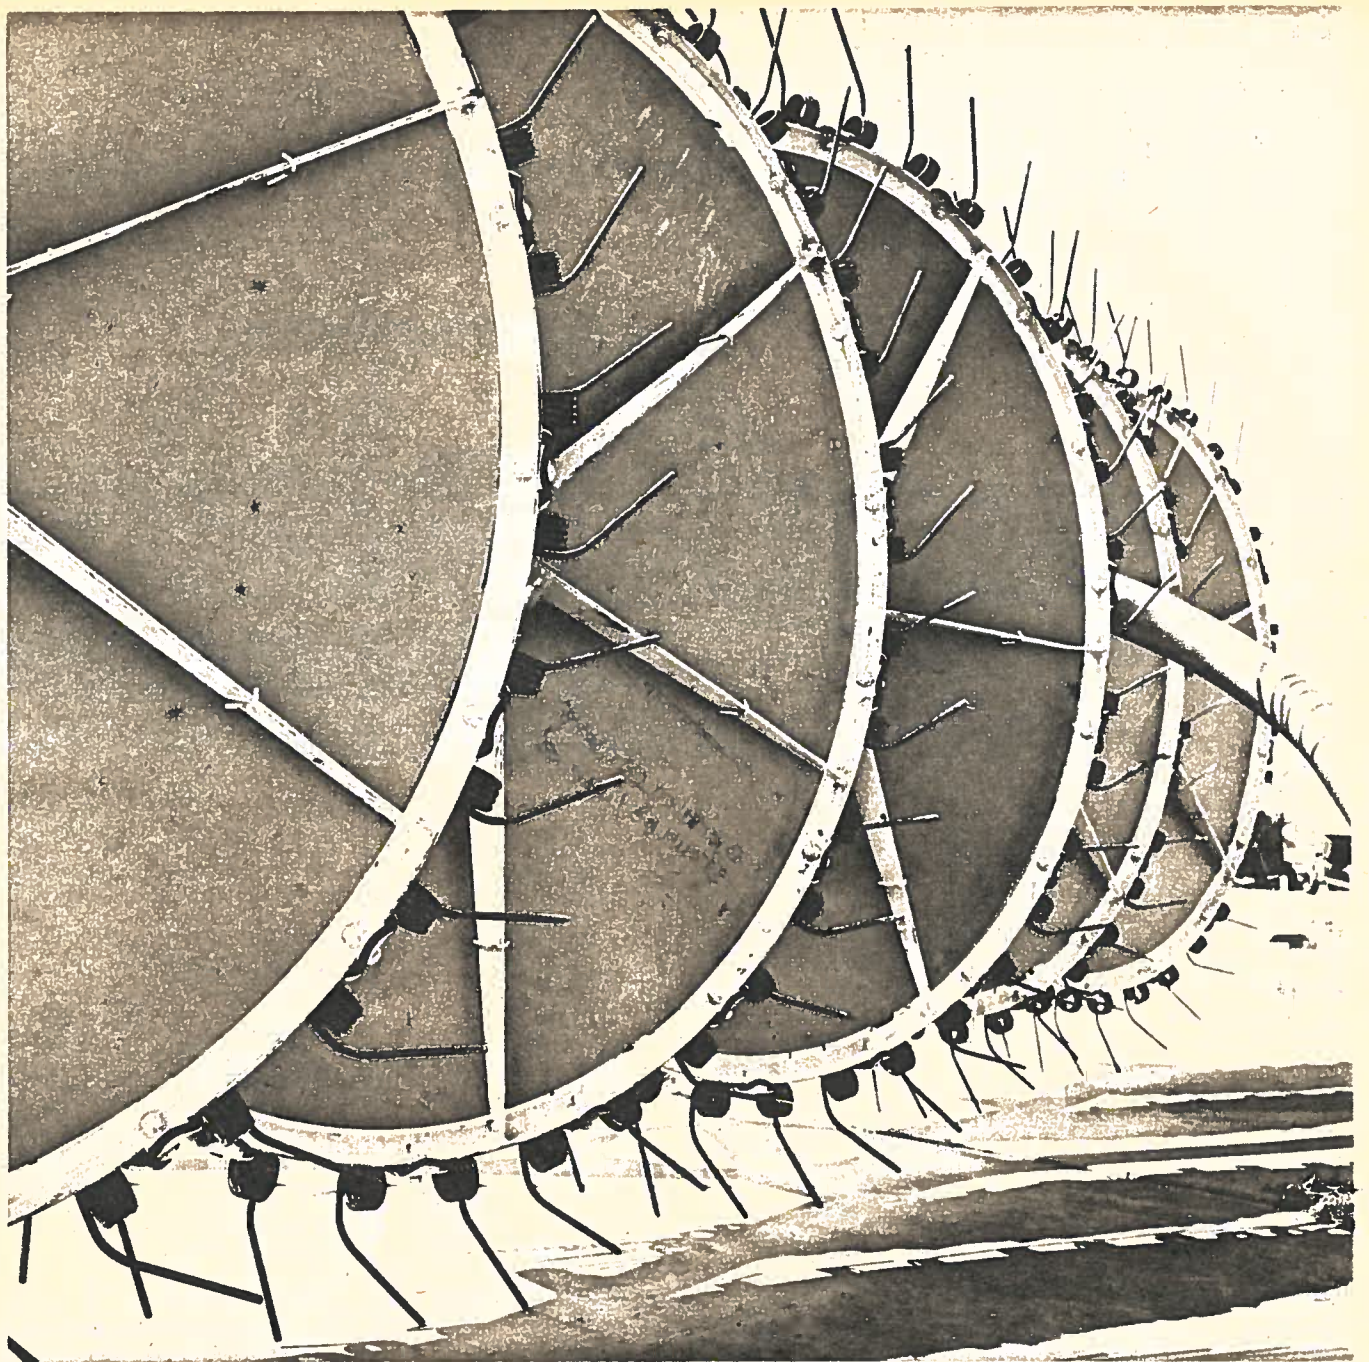

It looks like a mechanical monster about to pounce. But relax! This forage harvester doesn't bite.

Some kind of stove pipe? Grill work? Just a closeup of a corrugated steel building.

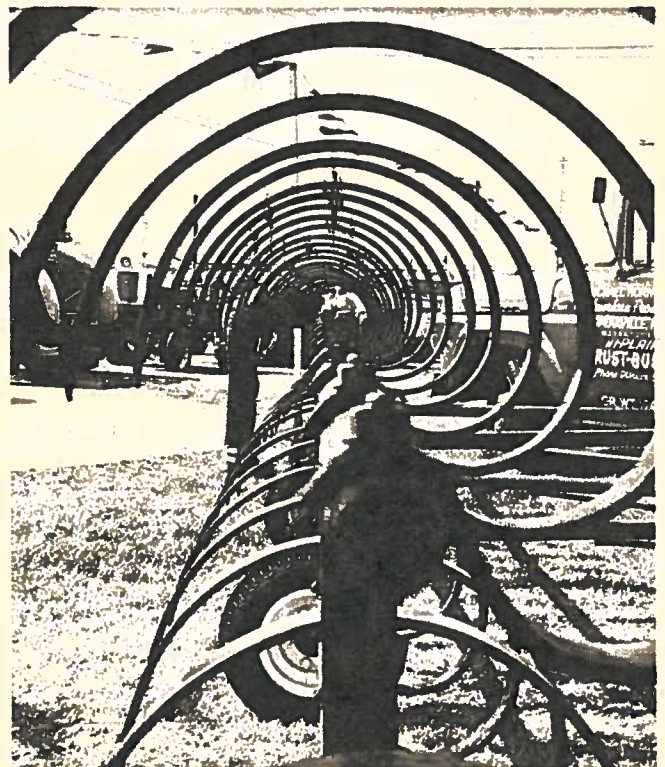

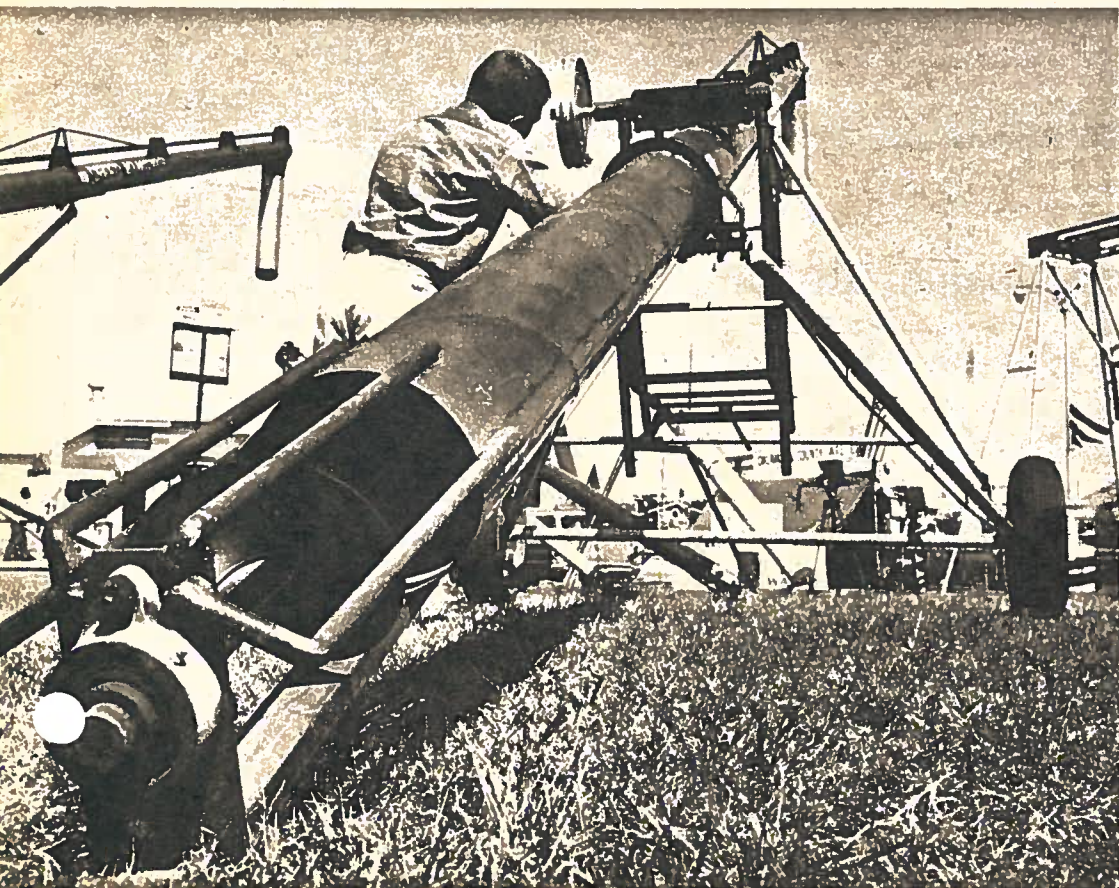

These "auger" a lot of saved work and time when it comes to digging + holes. You get the point?

Below: A rocket and launcher? Nope! Merely an earthbound grain auger.

Above: Much as it may look like a giant caterpillar —it's only a wheel rake, you city dwellers.

A study in symmetry in an end-on view is this spring-tooth harrow, also called a crust buster.

The only roof as pretty as this one...

is no roof at all

It's mighty hard to improve on a classic. And that's what Comet's roof has become. The '63 edition is shown above: jaunty, elegant. The only direction to go was off! Result: two Comet convertibles, one an S-22 with bucket seats. So if you prefer the sun, moon, and stars for a roof, choose a Comet top-downer. Prefer a classic? Pick the sedan. Either way you'll flip your lid.

The Art of Fast Talk

Harold "Red" Carney sometimes talks for 12 hours a day, almost without letup. Generally, the faster he talks the more money he makes—for himself and for others.

Carney is an auctioneer, one of those colorful fixtures of a competitive bidding and buying system that dates to earliest times.

He and the scores of other "criers" who work public sales large and small throughout Oklahoma utilize modern refinements—pre-sale advertising, loudspeaker systems, cushioned seats and air-conditioning for customers' comfort, sometimes even closed circuit TV. But their job's the same as it was in ancient market places: Get the best possible price for the goods being offered. An auctioneer is the seller's agent.

There's more to it than staccato chatter, says Carney, who's been coaxing bids from buyers since boyhood days in Barry County in southwest Missouri.

"A good auctioneer has a strong voice, of course. Not squeaky, but clear so people can understand him, just like a singer," he says. "No two criers are alike. They've all got different styles."

"And he's got to have good eyesight, so he can spot bidders as they make signs or call out. That's important. You always have the regular buyers whom you watch, but you never know when somebody else is going to jump in and bid."

Carney cries weekly livestock sales at Hominy, said to be the largest in northeast Oklahoma, and at Fort Smith, Ark. He also cries farm sales, which he says put extra demands on the auctioneer.

"He's got to know values and start 'em out bidding at a reasonable figure," he says. "If he didn't, they'd always be trying to buy a hundred dollar item for 5 bucks."

Carney says he's never lost his voice, has no voice-saving secrets. When he isn't talking up a fair price for somebody else, he raises and trains quarter horses at Broken Arrow. He usually cries livestock sales on a fee basis, farm sales on commission—usually 2 percent.

Carney says he got his start before he was high school age, "following an old auctioneer around selling pans and fruit jars—oh, that was a long time ago."

His biggest sale?

"I guess my biggest was more than $300,000 worth of cattle one day. I don't know how many head it was. I hope I don't do that again. That was when a lot of farmers had to sell out because of drouth."

Harold Carney presides in Hominy Sale Co. ring. Seller has set minimum price—it's the auctioneer's job to better it.

Beautiful for Spacious Skies

Oklahomans who love to photograph beautiful scenes need only to look about them to find colorful subjects. In the snapshot contest held by Orbit last summer, one of the most popular topics was Oklahoma skies—sunrises, sunsets, clouds. On these pages we present a selection from hundreds of beautiful pictures of Oklahoma's spacious skies that have been submitted by professional and amateur photographers in recent months.

Oklahoma people are, for the most part, a church-going people. Symbols of their faith are portrayed in this picture, entitled "Peace" by Mrs. Ivan L. Clark of Kingfisher, who took it.

The fortunes of Oklahomans depend largely upon whether rain comes or not. Chloe Glessner of Oklahoma City photographed this scene following a welcome rain last spring.

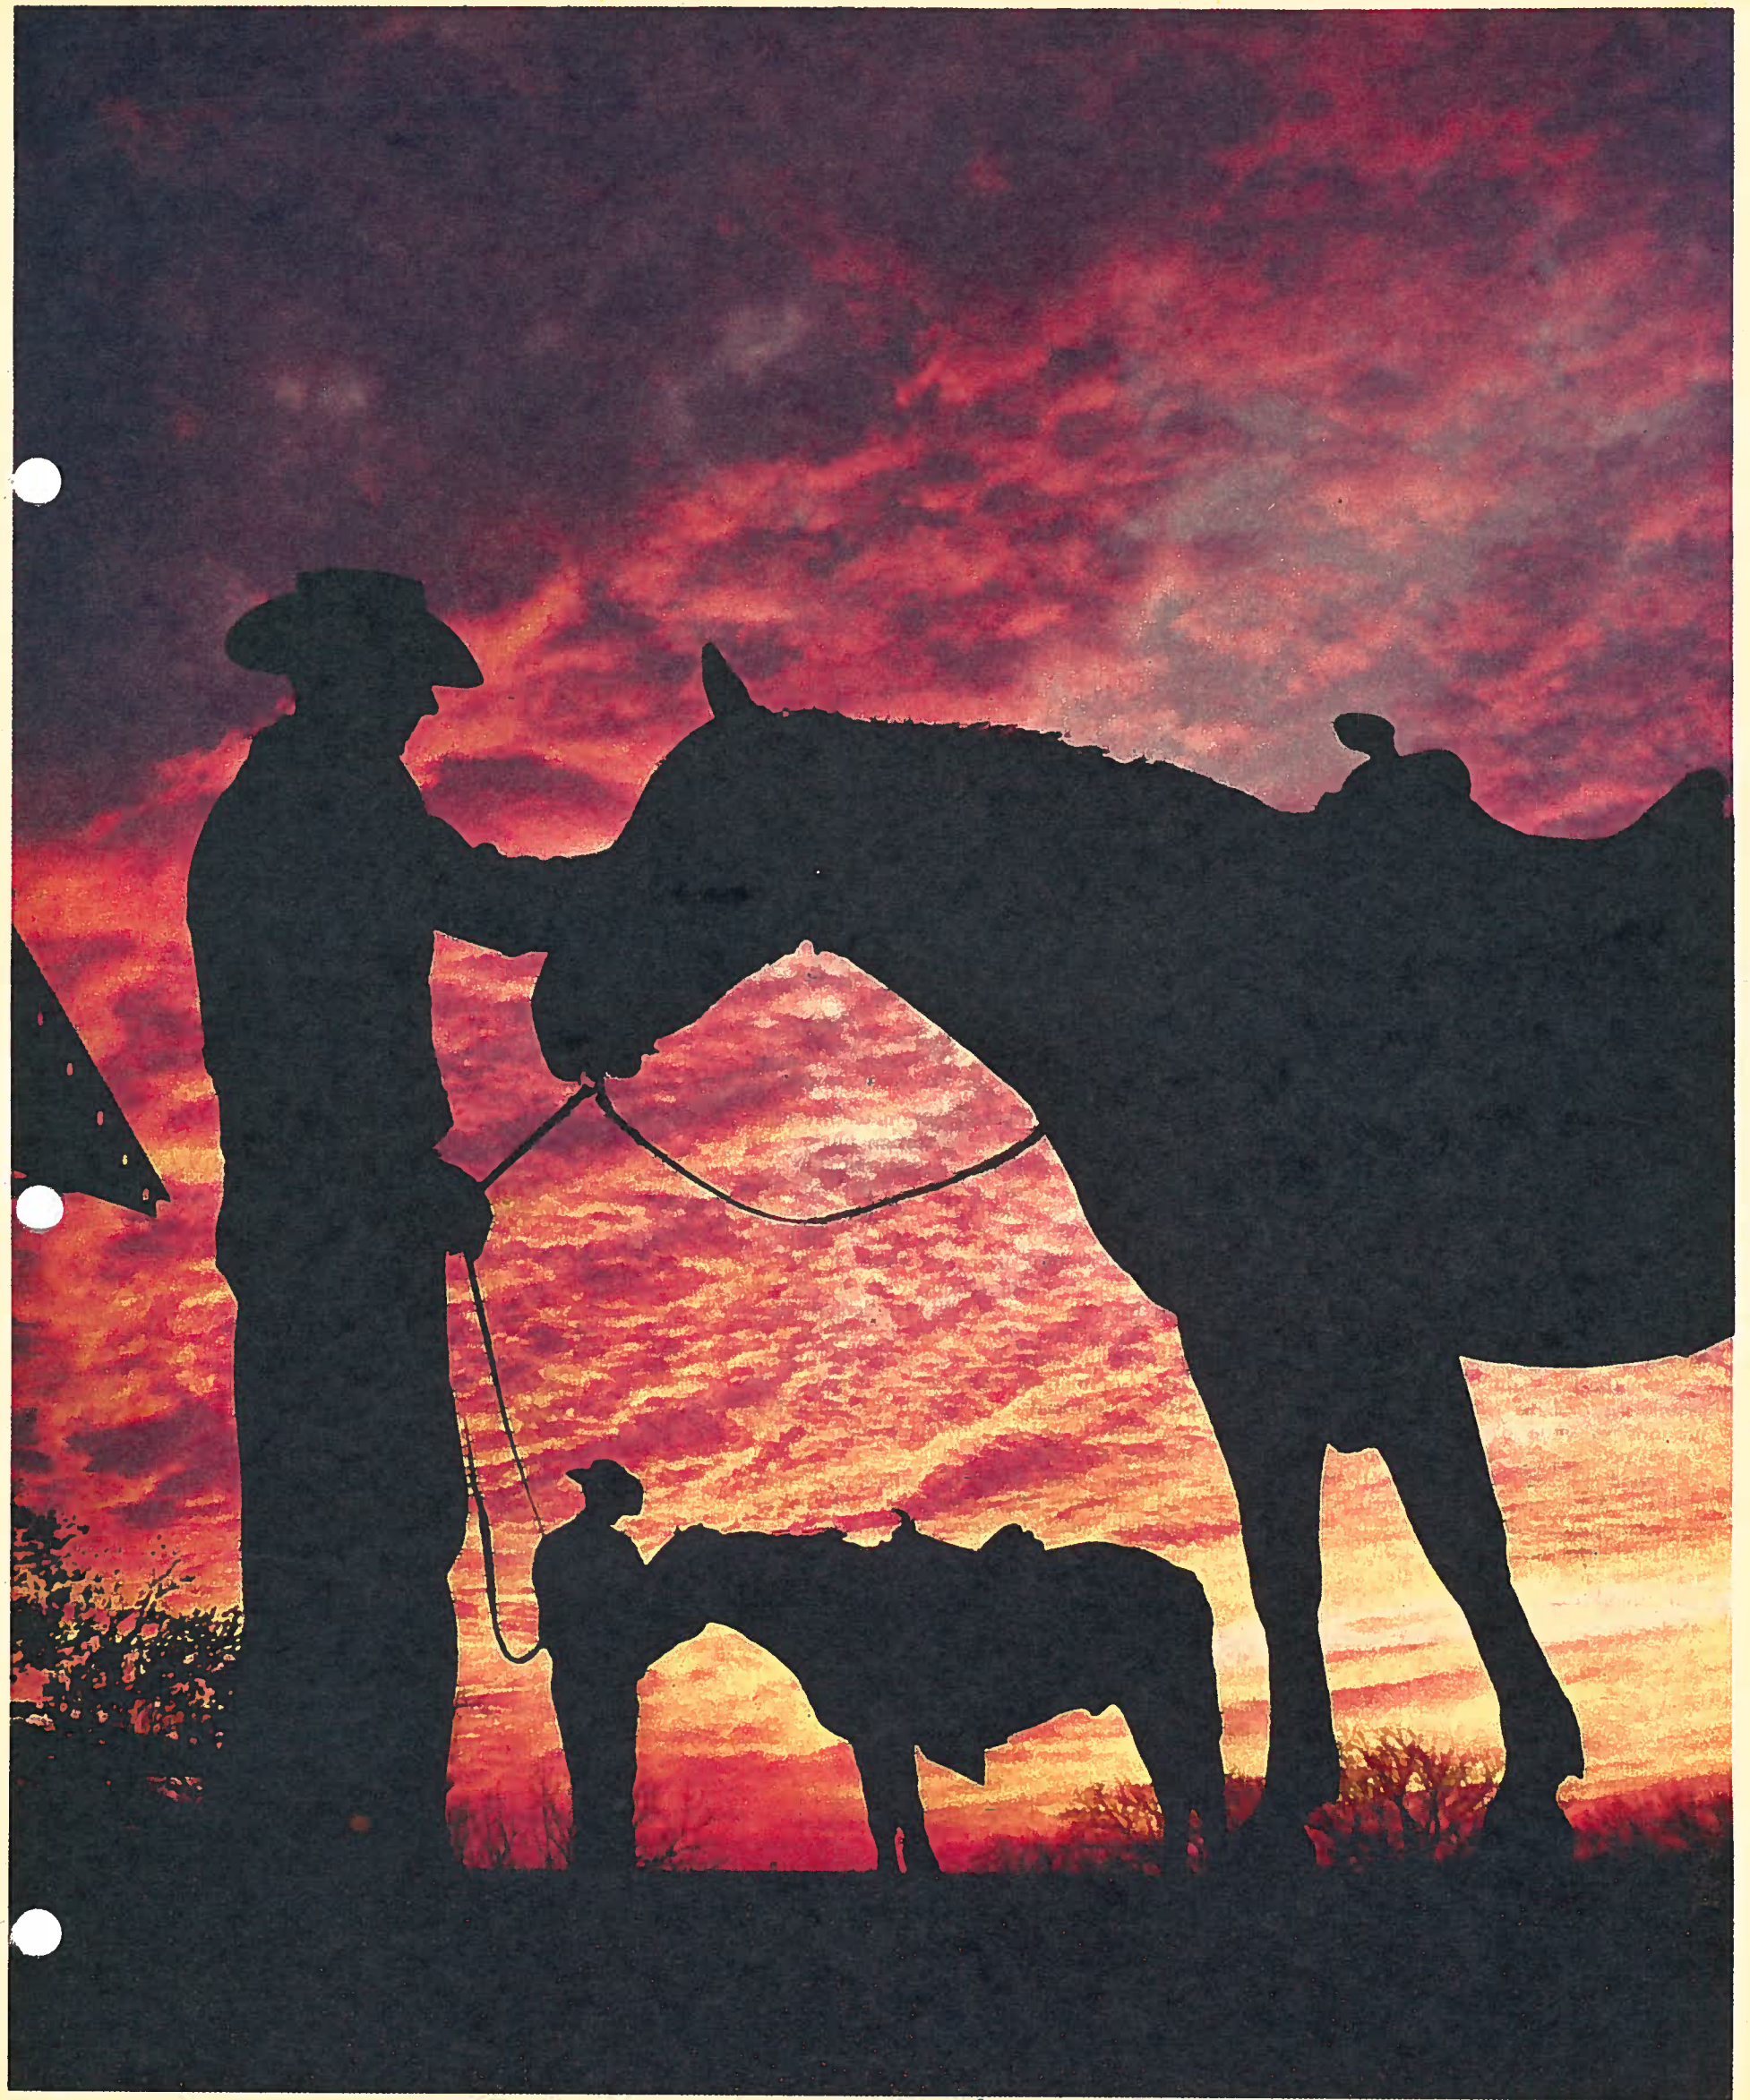

Horsemen ready to ride in early morn still symbolize our state's great livestock industry. colorful scene on the opposite page was made by Bob Taylor of Cordell.

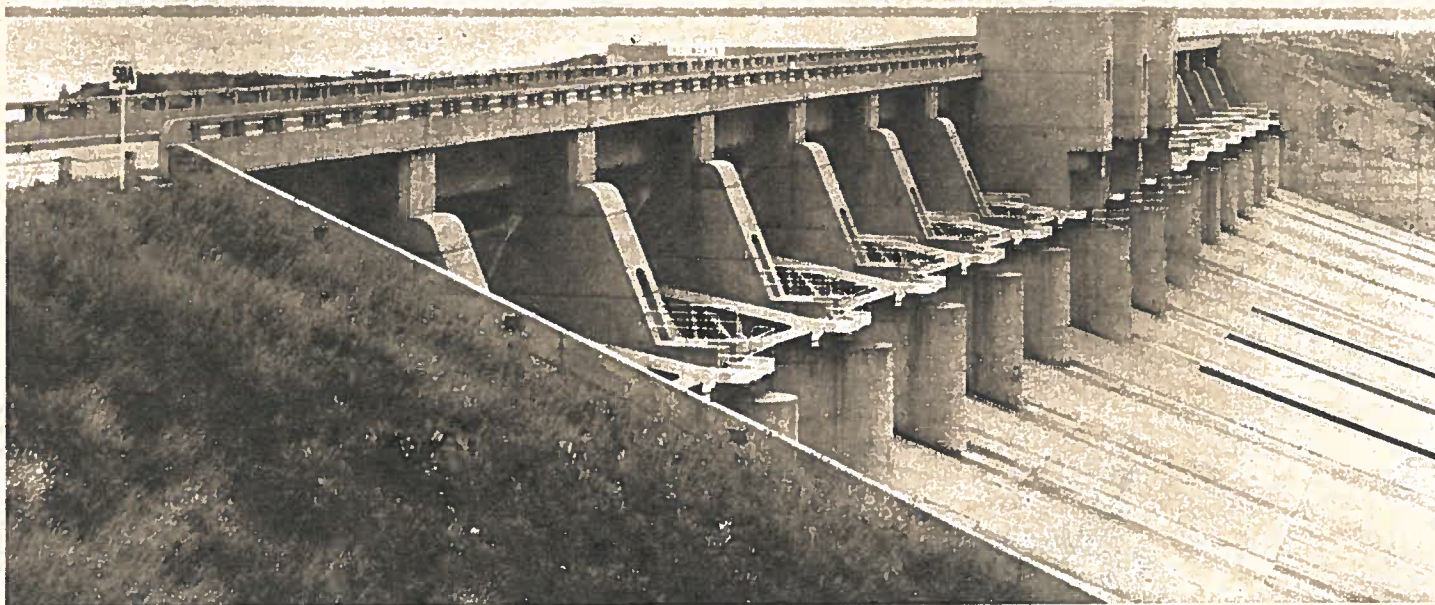

Industrial development is spreading out, even on the broad plains of the Oklahoma panhandle. Alice Hacker of Tyrone used the sky as backdrop for this industrial plant.

Countryside and city overlap now to the extent that it's hard to tell where one ends and the other begins. Bob Weaver of Muskogee portrays the rural atmosphere in "Oklahoma Dawn".

Big Canton dam rises 73 feet above the level of original river bed, contains three large flood gates measuring 7 by 12 feet each.

Banker Roy Shaw cites figures in Canton business boom. He's also an ardent fisherman.

The Worth of a Dam

BY EDD LEMONS

If big Canton Lake were filled with joy juice, the good people of this Blaine County town couldn't be happier.

When people come in large numbers to enjoy outdoor fun, that spells INCOME. And people are flocking to Canton every weekend, every holiday and often in between. They come in big cars, little cars, trucks and pickups. They haul boats, bring fishing tackle, swimming suits, picnic baskets and water skis. Nearly all of them spend money.

On the last Labor Day weekend, 26,400 people flocked to the Canton Lake playgrounds. A good day will see as many as 12,300 people present, all of them in a holiday mood. The lake was built in 1948 by the Corps of Army Engineers to control drainage water from more than 12,000 square miles. It also is a water resource for Enid; and Oklahoma City has used it for water storage for more than 10 years.

Canton Chamber of Commerce President Dean Rogers says filling station business in Canton is up 35 percent, restaurant business 50 to 75 percent, drug stores 25 percent. And tourist courts are doing a thriving business. The whole town is sharing in the surge.

That 66 tons of crappie were caught in a single hot streak of fishing over a few days span back in 1950 is still bandied about.

Banker Roy Shaw points to the big increase in investments on and near lake property. Commercial facilities constructed on private property are worth an estimated $254,000 — and on federal or lake property another $60,000.

There are $108,000 worth of house trailers located in the area. Value of cottages and clubs adds another $137,000.

So when you whiz through Canton headed for the lake two miles out of town, smile. Those folks are glad to see you.

Fairview Chamber of Commerce Secretary Bill Clifford shows John Steele the club built at lake by Fairview people.

Over $108,000 worth of house trailers dot landscape at lakeside and nearby. People camp here for extended periods.

Oklahoma Town

When Were You Here Last?

By nightfall on that first day of its existence in 1889, our town had 500 residents. And it's been growing ever since—to 33,412 in 1960.

It's located at an altitude of 1,160 feet on a plateau overlooking the valley of the South Canadian River. If you arrive by air, you'll land at Max Westheimer Field. If by car, the likely routes are U.S. 77 or S.H. 9.

One strange phenomena observed here is a sudden swelling of population on certain Saturdays in the autumn of the year.

Here you'll find Central State Hospital and the University of Oklahoma. There's no need to tell you it's Norman.

CLEANS AND POLISHES

“IT

Armstrong One-Step Floor Care does both jobs thoroughly in one easy step! It cuts your work in half!

No matter how you look at it—the people who make Armstrong Floors have come up with an entirely new idea in floor care. It's called One-Step Floor Care. Made for linoleum and vinyl floors and floor coverings, asphalt, cork, rubber tile and terrazzo—One-Step takes up the dirt as it puts down the shine.

One-Step, you see, contains detergent blended with a special formulation of polishes. These ingredients do two jobs for you at once . . . saving you hours of work each month caring for your floors. Just pour out, spread around, finish with smooth strokes. That's all there is to it!

Use One-Step for regular cleaning—whenever floors get dirty or dulled. That way, your floors will always have a lustrous, freshly polished look. With One-Step, incidentally, you just rinse your applicator in a bucket of water to get rid of dirt . . . instead of rinsing the floor.

So much for speed and convenience. The other important thing to remember is that One-Step's detergent gives excellent cleaning action . . . and One-Step polishes like the finest polish. After all, if anyone should know how to make a good floor-care product, Armstrong should.

You can get new One-Step Floor Care at the stores where you usually buy waxes and cleaners. Look for the rainbow container. That's new One-Step Floor Care . . . in the introductory 22-oz. size, full quarts and economical half gallons.

Holy City

BY PAUL LEFEBVRE

On the slope of a small hill in the Wichita Mountains Wildlife Refuge near Lawton is a natural amphitheater which can seat thousands upon thousands upon thousands.

It does! Every Easter morning!

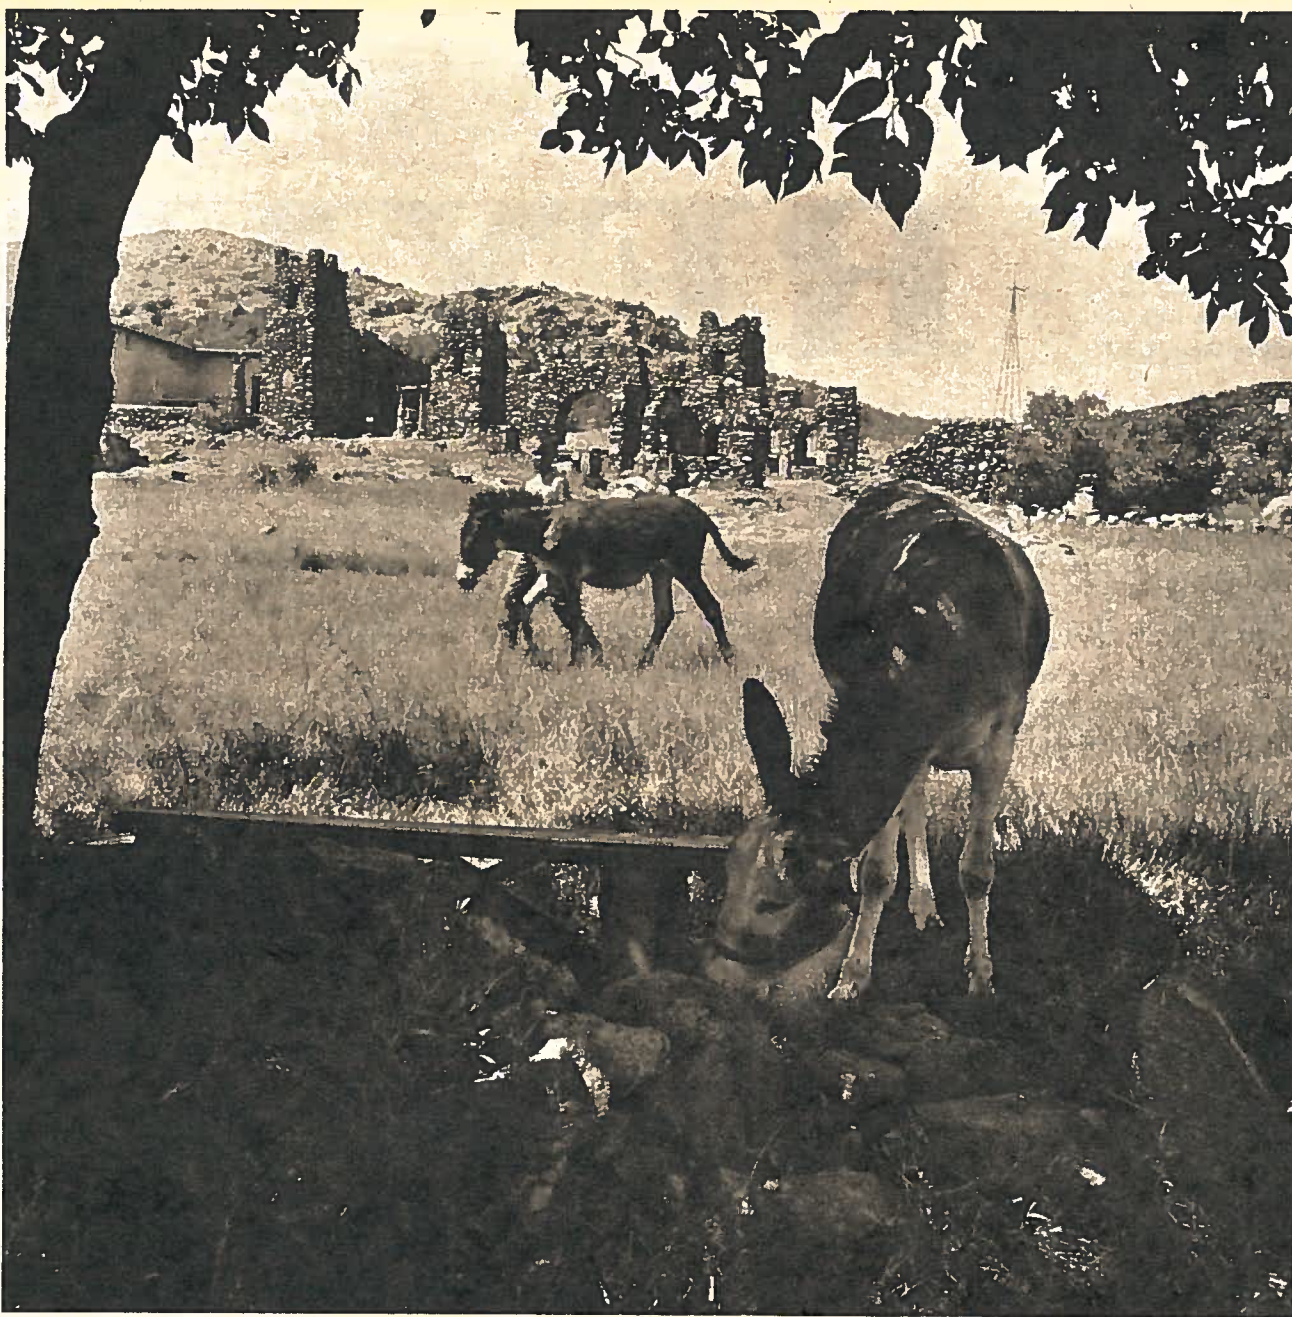

Here are recreated the Garden of Gethsemane, the Court of Pilate, the Tomb. And here, every Easter morning, a cast of 2,000 presents one of the nation's best-known passion plays.

And what of the day after Easter—and the days and months after that?

The "Holy City" never loses its atmosphere of reverence. Operated by the Wichita Mountains Easter Service Association (an incorporated non-profit group), the grounds and buildings are open to the public throughout the year.

Included is a chapel in which an average of 40 weddings are held annually. There are numerous other church affairs.

The grounds and the symbolic chapel do, indeed, stand as "a place of worship for people of all faiths and races."

As in olden times, the storied burro is much in evidence at "Holy City". The animals have free range of the grounds.

Doors are open to all at the interdenominational "Holy City" chapel. Only the inquisitive burros find their way barred.

Murals on ceiling and walls of chapel are the work of Irene Malcolm, formerly an art teacher in the Lawton schools.

OKLAHOMA'S ORBIT

Great Stacks of Wax

Ten-pound slabs of an emulsifiable wax await packaging for shipment.

Bees could learn a thing or two in Barnsdall, where the world's biggest factory of its kind is operating.

Nope, it isn't honey they turn out. It's wax, in 75 different grades.

Shined your shoes, polished a floor, spun a record or wrapped a sandwich lately? Chances are you used some of the product that comes out of the Bareco Wax Co.'s refinery.

And, ladies, that stuff you put on your lips, rub on your cheeks and dab around your eyes to bolster nature—there's wax in that, too. Could be it's Oklahoma-produced wax, for the Barnsdall refinery ships millions of pounds a year all over the free world.

Bareco, a division of Petrolite Corp. of St. Louis, is the largest exclusive producer of microcrystalline waxes in the world. There are larger plants, but none whose sole business is microwax.

Microwaxes, it might be explained, are a petroleum product, like paraffin. But microwaxes differ from paraffin in molecular structure. They are flexible; paraffin is brittle.

The Barnsdall plant, established in 1914 as a conventional gasoline and motor oil refinery, began microwax production in 1935 and went exclusively to waxes in 1946. It employs 150 persons, Osage County's largest manufacturing payroll.

Crude oil from Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana is the raw stuff from which the Barnsdall plant turns out microwaxes in white, light and dark amber colors, in soft, hard and emulsifiable varieties.

Soft (or plastic) wax goes into paper laminates, packaging, waterproofing, cosmetics, sealing compounds, rust preventatives. Hard waxes are used in phonograph records, carbon paper, paper coatings and sizing. Polishes of many kinds contain emulsifiable waxes. Combined with resins and other chemicals, microwaxes become synthetic waxes with paste or gel-forming qualities.

"Our products aren't just balls of wax," explains superintendent L. M. Keene, who started as a laborer at the Barnsdall plant in 1924. "They're individually tailored to the users' needs."

That's something which can't be done even by the bees or the carnauba wax-producing palm trees of Brazil.

From steps of storage tanks, Bareco superintendent L. M. Keene looks over plant. By-products go to oil refiners for processing into other products.

Wax is molded into slabs after refining. Molten wax flows into molds at 200 degrees.

candy centers gets its own special blend of

Brach's Pure Chocolate

... and one taste tells you it's the finest! You'll love the chocolate we put on plump, roasted peanuts. It's exactly right—for peanuts! But it might not do at all for raisins or caramels. That's why we make fifteen different blends of pure chocolate—each one the perfect flavor partner for a particular candy center. Be sure to try your special favorite tomorrow.

Oklahoma's Ancient Spiro People

Model of a village of the Spiro People is created from plaster, imagination and detailed study of ancient sites.

Effigy pipe found in mound looks at world with a diabolical sneer.

BY MIKE McCARVILLE

An early painting shows how the mound appeared before excavation.

In northern LeFlore County, near the banks of the twisting Arkansas River, is a mound of earth 33 feet high, 300 feet long and 115 feet wide.

It's just five miles northeast of Spiro—and that's where "the greatest archeological discovery" in the southwest got its name.

The Spiro Mound was first excavated by WPA workers in 1936.

As far as can be determined from skeletons and other evidence unearthed at the site, the people who inhabited the area and built the mound were Cad-doan Indians in origin.

Placed roughly between 1100 and 1300 AD, the "Spiro People" were highly religious, a fact made plain as several successive archeological expeditions unraveled their story.

First to investigate the mound and photograph it was Prof. J. B. Thoburn—at the time an assistant history instructor at the University of Oklahoma.

What was perhaps the most important part of the mound was destroyed by a commercial digging crew in 1934. The diggers had rented the land to hunt for artifacts, which drew excellent prices at curio shops. Soon the once-plentiful relics began to grow scarce and the diggers dynamited the central chamber of the mound, destroying for all time what might have been the key to a full history of the mound area's inhabitants.

From remaining relics, it has been determined that the area was an important religious center for the "Spiro People," a relatively sophisticated people with a high quality culture.

The people, as can best be determined, were medium to short in stature, with straight black hair. Skulls of males were artificially flattened. Their noses were hooked and flattened.

The Spiro Mound, as such, no longer exists. All relics discovered have been parceled out to museums participating in its excavation.

The University of Oklahoma Stovall Museum of Science and History has an admirable collection, in the midst of which is this statement: "... seldom has a site produced such an amazing array of specimens both in number and quality as did the Spiro Mound."

Panhandle Painter

BY MRS. L. R. TYSON

What puts the touch of greatness in an artist's brush?

It's simplicity, Alva Glenn Satterwhite always tells those who come to study at her Pampa, Texas home. And she's quick to add: "Don't ever be afraid to be yourself."

Proof that the Oklahoma-born artist has found a workable formula echoes in the words of critics such as Elaine De Kooning of New York and Charley Bunnell of Colorado Springs who have termed her the greatest living primitive painter in America.

Alva, as she signs her pictures, was born at Hennepin, Okla., in 1906 and grew up on a farm just half a mile from the Satterwhite school near Elmore City. In 1925 she married Marshall G. Satterwhite of the Satterwhite community in Garvin County.

After her son and daughter were grown and gone from home, Alva began to look for something to occupy her spare time. A friend interested her in drawing lessons—and she started to work in oils.

After painting on her own for about a year, during which she produced some of her best primitive works, Alva began to study under Dord Fitz of Higgins, Texas. It was under his tutelage that she branched into abstract expressionism.

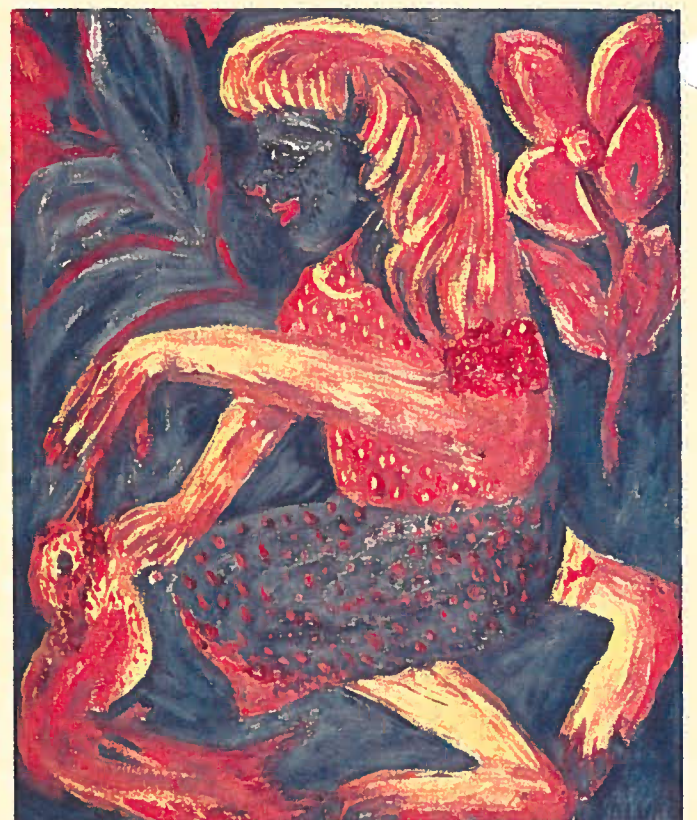

A prolific worker, Alva has produced over 700 paintings. She says she is trying to make up for all of those years when her talent lay unused.

Portrayal of Satterwhite School is appraised at $500. Children shown at play in yard are artist's brothers and sisters.

Mrs. Alva Glenn Satterwhite's subject matter covers wide range. The above abstraction is of two figures playing golf.

Another facet of Mrs. Satterwhite's versatile brush comes to the fore in expressionist painting of a girl.

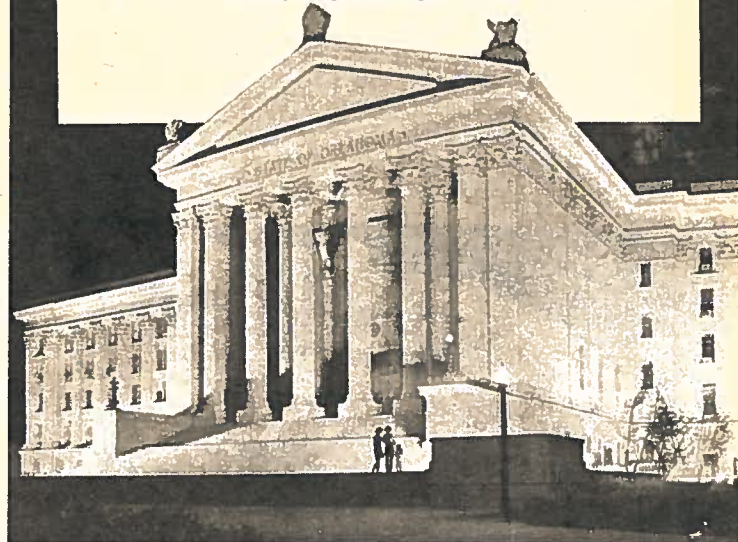

An artist at work! Some 75 of Mrs. Satterwhite's works were placed on display in a one-man show in Amarillo recently.

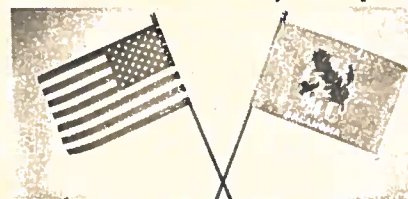

Surrounded by her own creations, Mrs. Satterwhite discusses the fine points of one of her more unusual works of art.

for Better Fruit Cakes

Bake Early

A gay way to say happy holiday and meet an early deadline for ol' St. Nick is to get busy stirring up such delicacies as Ruth's White Fruit Cake.

BY KATHARINE RANDALL

Early birds bake the best fruit cakes. So fly to your nearest store and buy candied fruits and other goody-ingredients for the makings of the best cake of the yuletide. Make extras for gifts and save stewing about what to give that "friend who has everything."

Advance preparation of fruit cakes allows time for mellowing of enticing ingredients — plus another bonus. You will be freed of last minute preparation and can better enjoy family and friends.

Many homemakers have their own favorite fruit cake recipes. We have ours. Last year we gave you one for dark cake. This year we share with you our favorite recipe for white fruit cake.

This one comes the closest to being white of any of this type we've tried.

There are no darkening spices; almonds are lighter than the more frequently used pecans, although this home-grown product can be substituted for almonds. Lending a touch of traditional Christmas color are the maraschino cherries and citron. If you are an anti-citron fruit-cake-eater, substitute candied pineapple, either the natural or tinted-green variety, or white raisins previously plumped in a dab of cold water and paper towel-dried. Fresh coconut helps hold ingredients together, keeping them moist, and lends an extra-special yummy flavor during the important "aging" period.

If you prepare fruit and pans a day or two ahead of mixing and baking day, fruit-cake-making is a breeze. It's this piddling preparation that makes it seem a chore.

Easiest way to prepare coconut is to get your husband or eldest son to do it. If this doesn't work, then you take a sharp pointed instrument to tap the 3 soft spots at end of coconut. Pierce one and drain off the milk, reserving it for use in cake; if there's more than the necessary half cupful for the cake, you're lucky—drink it or save it for a curry dish. Then, holding nut in one hand, tap shell gently all around. Continue until shell falls off. Avoid hard blows, for they tend to cause meat to break with shell. Slice off skin—and start grating!

If fresh coconut is not available, use this substitute: Combine in saucepan $1\frac{1}{2}$ cups flaked coconut and $1\frac{1}{3}$ cups milk, or 1 cup packaged grated coconut and 1 cup milk. Simmer over low heat, stirring until mixture foams—1 or 2 minutes. Cool slightly and strain, pressing out as much pulp as possible. Yields 1 cupful — enough for this recipe. Use this full strength, not half and half as with fresh coconut milk.

Almonds can be easily slivered if they are dunked briefly in warm water, then dried. Candied fruit is readily sliced if knife or shears are dipped frequently in warm water.

To prepare large tube pan or deep loaf pan, cut 2 layers of clean brown wrapping paper to fit bottom of pan, then cut 2 layers to fit sides, and 2 layers for top cover. Grease pan well with shortening, then fit layers of paper to pan and grease these well. This helps prevent formation of thick crust during long, slow baking period. Waxed paper does not serve as well for this purpose. Foil may be used.

With pans oven-ready and fruit and nuts sliced, the rest is easy. Set oven at 250 degrees F. Then start stirring.

Ruth's White Fruit Cake

- $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. (1 cup) butter
- 1 lb. (2 cups) sugar
- 1 lb. (4 cups) flour
- 1 teaspoon baking powder
- $\frac{1}{4}$ teaspoon salt
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup fresh coconut milk
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sweet milk
- 1 teaspoon almond extract
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 8 egg whites, stiffly beaten
- 2 cups grated fresh coconut
- $\frac{1}{2}$ cup sliced maraschino cherries, drained
- $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. citron
- $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. blanched almonds, slivered

Cream butter and sugar well. Sift flour, baking powder and salt. Reserve a half cupful of this flour mixture to dust fruits and nuts.

Add almond and vanilla extracts to milk blended with coconut milk. Then add flour mixture and milk mixture alternately to butter and sugar, beginning and ending with flour. Avoid overbeating, for this tends to produce a "breadly" texture.

Carefully fold in stiffly beaten egg whites, again avoid over-doing the mixing. Fold in the floured fruits and nuts.

Fill large tube pan, 2 loaf pans, or several small, deep pans $\frac{2}{3}$ full. This yields about 5 lbs. of cake. Place paper cover on top.

Bake large cake at 250 degrees for 1 hour, then increase temperature to 300 degrees and continue baking for 1 hour more. Decrease baking time 30 to 40 minutes for smaller cakes, depending on size. Remove paper cover during last 20 minutes of baking.

Allow cake to partially cool before removing from pan. Then remove to cake rack. Remove paper from sides and bottom to prevent tearing cake when cold.

When cake is cold, wrap in foil, film or several layers of waxed paper. Store in refrigerator for ripening. Here it may be kept until the holidays, or at end of 2 or 3 weeks of ripening in refrigerator, cake may be stashed away in freezer.

The Last
Cooking
BY
SAM AND LUCYLLE LAMB

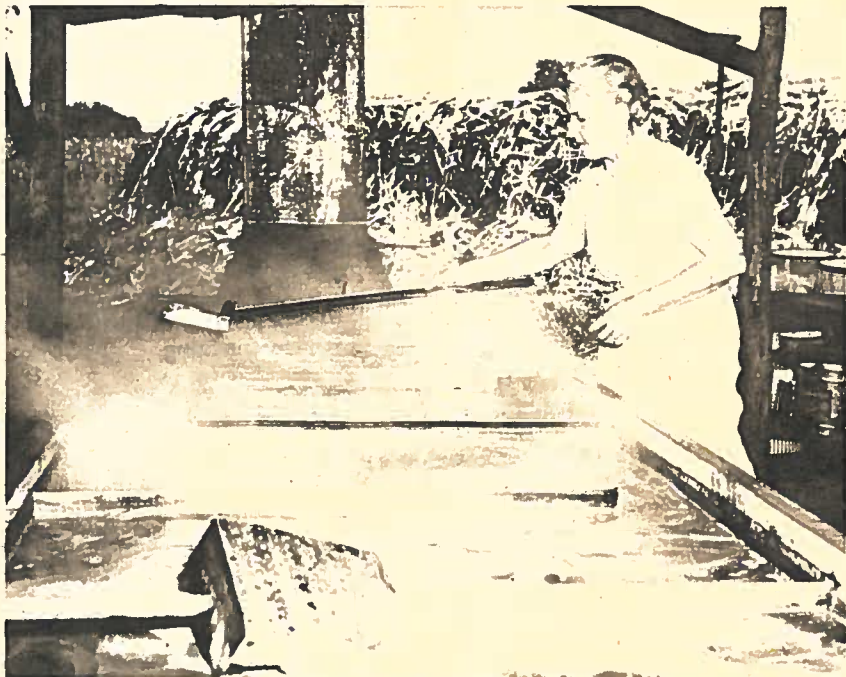

Cane stalks — even higher than an elephant's eye — are stripped before being cut and hauled off to the press.

Sorghum mills, such as the one pictured here, once dotted the landscape, but they have now become scarce.

Marshall Cook and Vann feed cane stalks into the press to squeeze out the juice. Mules once provided power for the press.

Mrs. Marshall Cook says making sorghum molasses is about like making jelly. Here she "spoons" to prevent syrup from scorching.

This fall marked the end of an era for Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Cook and G. W. Cook of route 1, Fort Gibson. Their sorghum mill east of town, near Perkin's store, has shut down for the last time.

The pungent smoke from the wood fire, the sound of the grinding of the cane press, the swirling steam that rises from the big cooking vat are gone. The sweet syrupy cane juice cooking down into that old-fashioned delicacy known as "sorghum molasses" will no longer be an attraction to tourists and the local residents.

As they were nearing the end of their last cooking, Mrs. Marshall Cook pointed to her brother-in-law, G. W. Cook, who was supervising the fire and helping her keep the syrup "spooned." "He has been making sorghum around here pretty near all his life, I guess," she said.

Marshall Cook and Vann, his helper, were busy feeding the cane stalks into the press, operated by a belt-driven motor and powered by the tractor.

Making sorghum is a long and painstaking procedure. The fire must be kept just so and the "skimming and spooning" is a continuous process to prevent the sorghum from sticking or scorching.

Mrs. Cook turned to wait on several ladies who had driven up to purchase sorghum. The transactions finished, she took up her position once again at the vat and began to skim the bubbling syrup.

"This will be our last cooking," she said. "It is just getting to be too much work for us."

The Here

Never take your eye off the peg.

If there's a secret to Andy Mogus' success, that's it.

Twice in a row now the Bartlesville meter reader has won the state horseshoe pitching championship, and he says that's how he did it—with concentration, with practice, and with some luck.

He's also had the benefit of competition in the hottest horseshoe town in these parts. In Bartlesville's Johnstone Park, lighted horseshoe courts are busy from spring to autumn with league and tourney play. Oil companies sponsor teams and the ringer rivalry is intense.

"When I started pitching in tournaments back in Kansas, some of the really good pitchers told me they never took their eyes off the peg once they'd stepped up there. I mean, don't move your eyes off it for anything."

The Grip

A ringer coming in! Jerry Kahle, right, is on target in Bartlesville's Johnstone Park, horseshoe capital of Oklahoma.

way the state
champion pitcher won the title

Horseshoe Is to Stay

BY BILL HARMON

"And you can't practice too much," the Sooner horseshoe champ adds.

Mogus won 6 of 7 games in round-robin play against Oklahoma's best pitchers this year to repeat his 1961 triumph. The one loss was to Charles Schrum, former state champion. Yep, Schrum is from Bartlesville, too.

Mogus, a left-handed pitcher, tosses a shoe that turns $1\frac{1}{2}$ times in flight. Most pitchers toss a three-quarter turn.

He doesn't know whether there's any particular advantage in that kind of toss, Mogus says. That's just the way he learned to pitch as a boy in West Virginia, where the pits were laid out in the barnyard and the shoes really came off a horse.

Now, the shoes are more standardized. They may differ somewhat in design, but all weigh $2\frac{1}{2}$ pounds. The pegs are a regulation 14 inches tall — and they stand in pits measuring 6 by 3 feet. The pits are filled with brick clay which stops and holds the shoes.

Mogus averages around 65 percent ringers — 65 three-pointers out of 100 tosses. In the recent tourney, he hit better than 85 percent in one game.

That's pretty good, he admits. But sometimes it isn't good enough. In an earlier open tourney at Bartlesville, a pair of Missouri men rung up first and second places over pitchers from Oklahoma, Kansas and New Mexico. Mogus was third.

And that's something the Oklahoma Horseshoe Pitching Association wants to do something about, says Jerry Kahle, secretary. "We'd like to see some of these other towns take an interest in the sport. Maybe have some matches between town teams. Then we could really start to develop some more fine pitchers."

Jane Heindselman brings V's Sandy out of retirement to illustrate barrel race for Orbit.

Jane Just

It's called barrel racing, and it looks deceptively easy, this increasingly popular rodeo event for women.

But it's a hard-riding race against time, and any misstep means precious split-seconds lost. It takes a good rider to be a consistent winner, but it takes a better horse.

Take it from Jane Mayo Heindselman of Okemah. She says the winning race belongs 75 percent to the horse, and there's not one good barrel horse in a thousand.

She should know, and not just from watching rodeos from the grandstands. As Jane Mayo, she's known to every rodeo fan as winner of three straight world barrel racing championships, 1959-60-61, and the women's all-around rodeo title in '59, to name a few honors she corralled since winning her first race at 13.

In a barrel race, horse and rider dash from a starting line, alternately circle three barrels—some 50 paces apart—in a cloverleaf pattern, then sprint back to the start. Good time is about 18 seconds.

"A good barrel horse must have speed, of course," Jane says. "He must have turning ability, power to leave a barrel quickly. He's got to be smart, smarter than a horse working cows because this type of race is foreign to a horse's nature."

The secret of winning is to get a good horse and keep him in condition, just like an athlete, she says. But that doesn't mean the rider is just along for the fresh air.

"The rider must 'get with the horse,' keep him in Around first barrel, heading for second.

Fast-moving horse and rider clear barrel No. 3, and now comes all-out dash for home.

Quit -- a Winner

balance, know what he can do. There's plenty of chances for mistakes, like running by a barrel or turning too close and knocking it over. And every course is different, the barrels placed differently, the ground in different condition."

It takes a special kind of person to rodeo, says Jane, and it's a rugged life—rugged for men and more so for women.

"Rodeoers are independent types, strictly individualists. The attraction is more than the money you win, because there's not a lot of profit in it. It's the satisfaction of being the best. I wouldn't trade what I've done for anything."

Jane, now 25, began riding professionally in 1954 after finding a bridge path to health as a child stricken by Hodgkins disease. Riding became her life.

"Every child should have a chance to learn to ride. You never saw a kid learn bad habits from a horse," she says.

Now breeding and training horses north of Okemah, Jane retired her horse, V's Sandy—now fat and 14—from racing after winning her third world title and setting a money-earning record for the event.

"I just decided I'd quit winner," she says, and she doesn't expect to ride in competition again.

"No, my horse is retired and there's no chance of getting a good one again. I've always heard a person is allowed just one good horse and one good dog in a lifetime. I've had mine."

The Smoking Room

BY R. G. MILLER

Unless the eastern Oklahoma mountains and forests were hit by a killing frost during the last week, the autumn foliage show in that region should be as colorful this week as it was a week ago. A freeze always causes tree leaves to curl up, turn brown and lose most of their luster.

A few days ago in McAlester, politics entered the Love Your Neighbor club meetings. The clubs planned a white elephant sale to raise funds for one of their worthy causes, but first wanted to know whether such a sale would boost the GOP symbol or not. The women, bless 'em.

While roaming the southeastern woods recently we came across our old friend and fishing and hunting companion, Mac McCartney, a timber scout who lives in Valliant. He reported that the region's crop of hickory nuts this season is very slim, that the muscadines are all gone and that the late autumn crop of huckleberries high on the mountains is not up to normal. Not much use going down there except to enjoy scenery and perhaps sight some deer.

Opening of the quail season is just 16 days away, and we find that Sam Ball in Watonga sent his pointer, Boomer, to college this year, majoring not only in finding birds but retrieving them. Sam is now studying the proper language and tone of voice to use in handling an educated dog.

The city of Moore planned to sell some of the alfalfa around the new sewer plant site, but it was suggested that some of the alfalfa be saved for horses, ponies, goats and other stock which graze on lots not too far from the new city hall.

Mrs. G. F. Mock in Bartlesville called the Examiner office to report that about 20 quail were feeding in her front yard. A photographer dashed to the residence, but the birds had vanished before he got there. Maybe the birds will be back when the season opens.

Store owners and their clerks in Chandler, on arriving downtown for work early one morning, were pleased to find six bright, shiny new trash cans on Main Street intersections. The cans were put there by the city's beautification committee. People are asked to toss their trash into the cans, not just "at" them.

This is an effective way for a town to call attention to what it is good for besides friendliness. Wynnewood's chamber of commerce sent some delegates to a big reclamation conference in a northwestern state, and they took along 800 whisk brooms and 800 small sacks of pecans, both of which Wynnewood produces in abundance.

In the field of good neighborliness, this is a good example. Out in Corn we find that George Hamm, Roy Fleming, Willard Couch and Alvin Kroeker were driving south of town and noticed a carton of roofing nails had been spilled on the pavement. The men got out, stopped traffic, got a broom, swept up a gallon of the nails, then went on.

Concerning the way so many people sling the English language around, we like the way Ann Garner in El Reno puts it: "The language is in a precarious state. We no longer use decently the valuable common property, speech. We have, in the name of freedom, cast aside the social obligations to write and speak well. Our literature of every grade uses the language of the gutter and we wallow in a mire of tolerance for the parlance of the street and the jargon of the illiterate."

Lee Wilson, southeast of Harris in McCurtain County, cleared the brush from 28 acres. Up to then he could pasture only two cows on that tract. Now he can keep 14 cows on the same 28 acres.
