

Editor Hit

By Seizure

Jan. 18, 1971

Ferdie J. Deering, 60, editor and manager of The Farmer-Stockman and a director of the Oklahoma Publishing Co., collapsed this afternoon in the company cafeteria.

The St. Anthony Hospital coronary unit and a fire department pulmotor squad were called to assist Deering

Editor at Home

After Collapse

Jan. 19, 1971

Ferdie J. Deering, editor and manager of The Farmer-Stockman and a director of The Oklahoma Publishing Company, was reported resting at home in good condition after he collapsed in the company cafeteria Monday.

The physician who examined Deering, 60, at St. Anthony Hospital, said Deering's heart readings were normal and he apparently had not suffered a heart attack. He was to rest at home for a week before returning to work, the doctor said.